It borders on the Arabian Sea for about three hundred miles. It may be described in general as an irregular triangle. The sea line is the base of the triangle, and the apex a point about seven hundred miles in a north-easterly direction from Bombay. The northern boundary of the triangle begins on the sea-coast, about fifty miles north from Bombay, and runs north-easterly to a distance of a hundred miles or more north-east of Nagpur, in Central India. The southerly line, or side of the triangle, would run from this point in an irregular south-westerly direction till it meets the sea-coast, to the south of the territory of Goa, about two hundred and fifty miles from Bombay. Near the sea-coast runs a range of mountains parallel with it. It is called the Sayhadri range, or, in common language, the Ghats - receiving this name from the passes or steps, up through the range to the elevated table-lands of the interior. For a part of the distance on the north of the Mahratta country, there is a range of mountains running east and west. Other ranges, parallel with this, are found in the interior. The region of country bordering on the sea is very broken. Spurs from the Ghats come down to the coast in great numbers, so that the whole district, to one traveling along the line of the sea, is a succession of precipitous hills and deep valleys. The bottoms of these valleys have, in some cases,...
