Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Ozark Harpist The Ozark Harpist Transitory Love. Oft have I seen with saddened eyes, The force of love in its trancing, worldly guise. As it seized its victims on precipice steep, And hurls them into the waters deep; Then lashes them o'er With mad waters which roar While the wild cataract on them its torrents doth pour - Thus driving out Reason and goodly song; Revellings and weepings all the day long. O, many a time has this love-throne Shook and trembled when love had flown. And always and ever, and deep as earth's sea, Will this love come forth from the shadows that be: For this is the love that is born for men - But not the love that will be when - We sense the life through the golden gate; But many for that love will be too late, For the sweet, mad love of this pulsing sphere, Is the only love where Hearts do adhere. Ah! this love that calls and calls with such sway, Is the love that grows old, and feeble, and gray. O, this love will drown life's years with tears; And in its triumph it will send its fears To numb and deaden, to drive insanely mad - For this love will rob life of all that it had. It gives but to take in its own wilful measure, And sustains or deserts at its own good pleasure. O, this demon, love, with its luring fire, Sings to the heart with its trancing lyre. Till the Heart is stirred, is drawn for awhile, And ashes, more ashes, are heaped on the pile. And...
